"Create In Me A Pure Heart"

Psalm 51

When David was confronted by Nathan the prophet, he had options. At least humanly speaking he had options. Yes, he was an adulterer. Yes, he was a liar and deceiver. Yes, he was a murderer. But he still had options. He could have blamed Bathsheba for bathing in the roof. He could have blamed God for giving him such a strong desire. He could have blamed Uriah for not cooperating with David's plan of deception. He could have blamed Joab for obeying his ruthless order to have Uriah killed. He could have minimized what he had done. He could have rationalized. He could have done all of those things and many would have overlooked David's sins.

But David knew better. David knew that before God there were no excuses. There is no blaming others. There is no reasonable rationalization for sin. David sits down and pens the words of Psalm 51. It is a psalm of repentance. It is a psalm of true sorrow. Not sorrow because he got caught. Not sorrow because of the consequences (and they were great). But sorrow because he had sinned against God. David talks of his sins, transgressions and iniquities. He begged God for forgiveness. He prayed to be cleansed and washed – and God did that.

But David's prayer went beyond just asking for forgiveness. David wasn't just concerned with the past and the present, but the future as well. He prayed for a "pure heart" and a "willing spirit". Within David's heart was not only a deep desire for forgiveness, but an equally deep desire to be better. True repentance involves a change of heart. A change of direction. A change of attitude. A change of lifestyle is necessary.

When we sin, God is not just concerned about our desire to be forgiven, but also about our desire to be better. Do we truly come before God with a "broken and contrite heart"? Do we truly want God to create in us a "pure heart" and give us a "willing spirit"?

"Create in me a pure heart O God, and renew a steadfast spirit within me." - Psalm 51:10
